Missionary Tells of School Built in Remote South Mexican Province

"There's just the land — the forest and the rock — but you go down and build a school." To Missionary Horace A. Kelley, 43, the directive sounded unlikely since for the past 11 years he had been a laboratory technician at a hospital in northern Mexico.

However, his church Mission Board's directive was specific — go and build a school! So Kelley traded in his test tubes and white smock for a remote spot of rain forest in Mexico's south-most state of Chiapas where he has literally carved a school out of the forest.

This week Kelley is in the Los Angeles area telling fellow Seventh-day Adventists and other friends of his school, Colegio Linda Vista, of the intense desire for more education among the Indians in the little-known area where the school is located.

"The youth of Chiapas are very eager to learn," Kelley declares. "They aren't illiterate, but they are very isolated. They know there is a better life for them through study."

The juvenile problems which have affected many more 'civilized' areas do not exist in Chiapas Kelley says. "The young people are too busy to get into trouble."

When he arrived in 1957 at Pueblo Nuevo Solistahuacan, the little village near which the school is now located, Kelley made a hurried survey of the school property. A tropical rain forest laced with bubbling streams gave promise of lumber and power.

He soon found a small sawmill and an old rock crusher, set them to work, and his school was started.

"Everything we needed had to be made by hand," Kelley says. "There was no running down to the lumber yard or hardware store for anything."

As the weeks passed, Kelley's hands, soft from hospital work, turned hard and rugged. The little sawmill began to turn the hard pine trees into boards and the rock crusher ground large rocks into foundation material.

Kelley enlisted the help of a group of hard-working Indian young people who planned to go to the school and soon building began to rise. Even when the rain came down in torrents the group kept carving the school site out of the forest.

"One day I looked up and there was our school," Kelley says. "I hadn't realized the time had gone so fast or that we were actually accomplishing what we had set out to do."

Looking back on his work Kelley sees nothing extraordinary in what he has done. "The assignment to teach given by the Master Teacher is a universal one that includes people throughout the world," he says. "That there are some places where this assignment might be harder than others is only natural."

"The gleam in the eye of an Indian boy as he catches some new concept in the classroom is payment enough for any hardship we may have had."

Torrance Educational Advisory Committee members will learn about "The Role of the Superintendent" at their meeting Monday, at 12 noon in the Torrance Masonic Hall, 2326 Cabrillo Ave.

Superintendent J. H. Hull will describe his role in heading the local educational program at the T.E.A.C. meeting. He has headed the Torrance Unified School District since it became a separate district in 1947.

A school construction report will be given by Assistant Superintendent S. E. Waldrip and reports on future meetings also are slated. Reservations should be made by Thursday, Jan. 7.
